

smiles
by meghan

smiles
by meghan

smiles
by megan

smiles
by megan

Printable Stationery - Greeting Card Kit

Equipment Needed ::

- computer
- adobe reader
- printer
- paper and card stock
- issors
- adhesive tape runner

Printing ::

Print at home or take it to a local copy shop. The rest of the document is locked from editing.

8.5 x 11 card stock recommended for cards.

8.5 x 11 printer paper recommended for liners and envelopes.

You could also print the cards on regular printer paper and layer colored paper behind

Assembly ::

Cut and fold using crop marks

Use adhesive tape runner for the edges of the envelopes.

The envelope liners work best when only the top edge is secured.

smiles by megan

Print as many as you need.

Original hand drawn and digitally drawn artwork by smilesbymegan.

You may not claim the artwork as your own, sell, giveaway, or share the file, or use the file to create other products. This file is for personal use.

What to write... about the weather

The dreaded small talk conversation.

You offer a smile.

And a hello.

And then maybe a comment about the weather.

But you leave feeling unfulfilled and wondering why you've just had a relatively meaningless conversation-if you can call it that- with someone.

It may be someone you know or an elevator companion or the clerk.

You wonder if they care about the answer.

You wonder if you care.

You finally sit down to pen a note to a friend, but all you can think about are the same quips about the weather.

You know she 'd love to hear from you and she probably doesn't even care if you discuss the weather.

It's okay to talk about the weather.

But what if you turn a complaint about the lack of sun into a note reminiscing about a rainstorm?

What did it sound like?

What did it smell like?

What color was the sky?

Did it wash the driveway or your car?

Do you like the rain?

Do you watch it from the porch or from the window?

All of a sudden you have a much more intriguing story to share.

Your friend feels like she's sharing the moment with you.

When you're wondering what to write, take something - like the weather - and make it meaningful and memorable.

smiles by megan

to a child

The dreaded small talk conversation.

You offer a smile.

And a hello.

And then maybe a comment about how big they've grown.

But you leave feeling unfulfilled and wondering why you've just had a relatively meaningless conversation-if you can call it that- with someone. It may be a niece or the little one in the shopping cart behind you or the neighbor kid.

You wonder if they care about the answer.

You wonder if you care.

You finally sit down to pen a note to a child, but all you can think about is what they were wearing or how cute they look.

You know she'd love to hear from you and she probably doesn't even care if you discuss how you had to share one mitten and walk uphill both ways to get to school.

It's fun to write to a child.

What colors do you see around you?

Do you have any pets?

What was your favorite childhood book?

What kinds of things do you do in your free time?

What do you remember about a summer vacation or special trip?

Do you play a favorite game with friends?

How do you celebrate a special event?

All of a sudden you have a much more intriguing story to share.

Your new friend feels like she's sharing the moment with you.

Your typical favorites and interests aren't quite so boring and are post card worthy.

When you're wondering what to write, take something - things a child would like - and make it meaningful and memorable.